The Heart of the Light Kay Rogal

Ancient history once declared the anchor as a symbol of hope, the heart representing love. Both have never stopped reaching out from the past, and the grave, seeking, hoping to tug on the hearts of the present in Maple Grove where betrayal, skeletons, love and a twenty-year old mystery are revealed.

The headmaster, diagnosed with Alzheimer's, misses the touch of his wife and will do anything to fire the nursemaid and bring her back; A young pup falls in love with a woman, who lives as a hermit, yet is drawn to him; the young pup's father, an attorney, hopes to rekindle the love of the mother of his child, whom he raised alone, never revealing the name of the mother to anyone, including to the mother; a man learns his wife, a women's advocate, has kept a secret, along with two other women, endangering them all.

Hidden agendas are revealed in every closet in a 'hipwaders vs heels' poker game between the men and women, ending like the 'Maureen O'Hara-John Wayne' movies with the men protecting and going after the women they love.
