Not illustrated. 1895 Excerpt: ...on, are, with the King of Rome, the only children the Emperor had. He never had any daughters, and I think he would not have liked to have any. I have seen, I do not know where, that the Emperor, during the longest stay we made in Boulogne, reposed himself at night from the fatigues of the day with a beautiful Italian. Here is what I know of this adventure. While I was dressing His Majesty one morning, in the presence of Prince Murat, His Majesty complained of seeing none but moustached faces, which, said he, was very depressing. The Prince, always ready to offer his services to his brother-in-law on such occasions, mentioned a very beautiful and witty Genoese lady who had the greatest desire to see His Majesty. The Emperor laughingly accorded a tête-a-tête, and the Prince undertook to deliver the message. In two days, by his means, the fair dame had arrived and was installed in the upper town. The Emperor, who was living at Pont-de-Briques, one evening ordered me to take a carriage and go for the protection of Prince Murat. I obeyed, and brought back with me the beautiful Genoese, who, to avoid scandal, although it was nighttime, was introduced through a small garden situated behind His Majesty's apartments. The poor woman was very much moved and was crying; but she was promptly consoled on seeing that she was welcome; the interview was prolonged until three o'clock in the morning, when I was called to take the lady back. She returned four or five times, and saw the Emperor again at Rambouillet. She was good, simple, not at all intriguing, and never tried to derive any advantage from a liaison which, after all, was only transient. Another of these favorites of a moment who precipitated herself, one might say, into the Emperor's arms, wi...
