Dana Montreux is young, beautiful, and made of money. Or at least that's how it seems to Perry Stavros when the two encounter each other in a Lake Tahoe casino one night.

Perry loses his shirt at the blackjack table, but thinks he's about to get the girl, until she takes him "home" to a posh San Francisco suburb and he finds that her purpose there is less about love than larceny.

A smitten Perry narrates the story of helping Dana in her quest to get even with the rich and powerful father, Philip Bonvin, who pressured his mistress--Dana's mother--into putting her up for adoption, thirty years ago. But when they start stealing from the man's priceless art collection, Perry figures the odds are good that things won't end well. We wonder, along with Perry, whether they'll both end up in the clink, as Perry's grandfather did, and whether Dana will ever realize that it's not revenge and riches she wants, but family affiliation and love.

Along the way, Dana and Perry purloin art from her father's Atherton mansion, from his ultra-modern townhouse on Russian Hill, and from the Bonvin family's legacy Queen Anne Victorian in historic Pacific Heights. Dana must confront the facts of a secret family betrayal, and face a jolting revelation about bloodlines, as she comes to an understanding of events in the troubled House of Bonvin that have shaped her life.

Prize-winning author, G. Miki Hayden, says the novel has "a sophisticated, smooth, entertaining style that results in a tight mainstream action-adventure which will work for both genders."
