The mason-wasps Jean-Henri Fabre

This is the second volume on Wasps in the Collected Edition of Fabre's Soirceurs entomologiques. The first of these was The Hunting Wasps; and the present volume is somewhat wilfully entitled, for all Wasps hunt in varying degrees, if not on their own behalf, at least on that of their young. My object, however, was to bring together all the essays treating of those Wasps who actually build homes or nests, as distinct from burrows. The last book on Wasps will be called More Hunting Wasps and will be issued towards the end of the series. For reasons which will be easily apparent to the reader, I have reprinted the chapter called Instinct and Discernment, which was included in Bramble-bees and Others, and that on the Volucella, which, under the title of The Bumble-bee Fly, formed part of The Life of the Fly. A part from the two chapters named and the essay on the Eumenes, which figures in The Instincts of Wasps, published in America by the Century Co.

(Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and don't occur in the book.)
