Idol Thoughts: Season Three Donna Reynolds

In 2002, a little summer replacement series called "American Idol" debuted on Fox. The show proved to be a smashing success, and returned the next January for another round. Since then, the show has completed two more seasons, and is about to kick off Season Five. Through it all, Donna Reynolds, a freelance journalist, has been watching and writing a weekly column for Foxes on Idol, one of the top ranked reality TV websites in the world. Her weekly "Idol Thoughts" column has been read by fans from as far away as Singapore, and she has built a career around writing about this show. This book documents the third season of the show, one of Donna's favorites. That was the season that George Huff emerged as an unlikely Idol, returning from elimination to go on to take fifth place. That was also the year of the "three divas," JPL, and a whole lot of controversy. Relive that entire exciting and dramatic season through Donna's sometimes jaded and always humorous words.
