What Will You Miss Most? Mark Ernest Pothier

Louise Martine has reached a comfortable-enough middle age by letting go of the things she can't change. She's recently but amicably divorced; her nest is empty and her job seems secure. Then, one morning, sudden death sweeps her father and his wife away. In the numbing grief she must wade through to gather the remains of her father's life, she's forced to come face-to-face with a mounting question in her own: Where did letting go become losing forever?
